C. Translate the following passage into plain Persian.

The Roman revolution in architecture, certainly one of the most significant and pregnant in the history of the craft, radically changed the footprint of structures and inverting the ratio of building mass to building void that had dominated architectural design until their time.

Technology and design achieved perhaps the perfect marriage in the Gothic cathedral. Master builders in the 12th and 13th centuries created a high rise structure carried by uniform piers set on the corners of a bay system, which ignored the distinction between interior and exterior.
